Celebrating 100 Years of Leadership for Liberal Education

1915 to 2015

The Association of American Colleges and Universities
AAC&U warmly thanks those foundations supporting the special activities and public will-building planned for our Centennial year, including Carnegie Corporation of New York, the Charles Engelhard Foundation, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, the Kresge Foundation, Lumina Foundation, the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, and the Teagle Foundation.

We also thank the many donors who are making financial commitments to the Centennial Fund, which will help launch the second century of AAC&U’s leadership for liberal education and inclusive excellence.

Finally, we express our appreciation to the many individual donors and philanthropic organizations whose generosity is supporting our efforts to advance the next era of reform and renewal in liberal education and support for underserved student success. These include the Arthur Vining Davis Foundations, the Charles Engelhard Foundation, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, Leona M. and Harry B. Helmsley Charitable Trust, W. M. Keck Foundation, the Kettering Foundation, the Kresge Foundation, Lumina Foundation, the Robert R. McCormick Foundation, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, MetLife Foundation, the National Science Foundation, the Sherman Fairchild Foundation, Inc., the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, Spencer Foundation, the Teagle Foundation, and TG Philanthropy.
From the President

One Hundred Years!

In 2015, AAC&U proudly celebrates 100 years of leadership for liberal education. We embrace this Centennial as a milestone in an ongoing journey, as a moment to mark and acknowledge all that our members have accomplished for students and society, and as a catalyst to launch AAC&U’s next era of work.

AAC&U members know well the power of engaged liberal learning: it expands economic opportunity, develops talent, and fosters the social imagination, habits of mind, and practical capacities needed to tackle today’s urgent problems. But we also know that it will take far-reaching change to provide this kind of learning to all college students, not just the most fortunate students. As the next era begins, this is our goal.

In 2012, AAC&U expanded its mission to address explicitly the question of who needs to benefit from an empowering liberal education. Our expanded mission is “to make liberal education and inclusive excellence the foundation for institutional purpose and educational practice in higher education.”

AAC&U’s approach to inclusive excellence encompasses not only what is taught—the knowledge, skills, and ethical responsibility needed to contribute to a diverse and globally engaged democracy—but also who is taught. Our long-term goal is to provide the most empowering forms of learning to all who enroll in college. We believe that America’s future flourishing depends on how well we prepare students to create solutions to our society’s myriad challenges—civic, economic, scientific, cross-cultural, and ethical. And, in a diverse and still stratified society, that will require a new focus on students from groups that historically have been underserved at all levels of our educational system.
Through our long-term initiative, Liberal Education and America’s Promise (LEAP), and in partnership with our nearly 1,350 institutional members, AAC&U has developed a comprehensive framework for liberal education and inclusive excellence. We are proud of the work AAC&U has done to provide a twenty-first-century framework for high-quality learning, and delighted to see the LEAP framework being widely adopted, not only in the United States but also abroad. Nonetheless, it will take concerted and broad-based effort to ensure that all students, across the full range of college majors and institutions, successfully achieve the kind of learning that a liberal education should provide.

Therefore, across the Centennial year and beyond, we will intensify our campus action and public advocacy in order to make excellent liberal education truly inclusive. We will work with our members to broaden employer, trustee, policy, and public support for liberal education as America’s best investment in both quality and expanded opportunity. We will highlight the many institutions and educators that already are working inventively to ensure equitable access to quality liberal learning for the extraordinarily diverse students we now serve in higher education. We will support far-reaching efforts to advance transformative educational change.

You, our members, are the vibrant heart of this association. Your educational vitality is this community’s most important resource. AAC&U will both tap and celebrate your creativity as we all work together to forge a second century of leadership—a century in which excellence will become inclusive, and liberal education will be recognized and embraced as the essential foundation for a free society, a diverse democracy, and a vibrant global economy.

Guided by its mission, the LEAP Principles of Excellence and LEAP Essential Learning Outcomes, AAC&U will help the higher education community advance the following goals:

LEAP. Liberal Education as a Global Necessity

QUALITY. 21st-Century Markers for the Value of US Degrees

EQUITY. Innovation, Inclusive Excellence, and Student Success

SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY. Integrative Liberal Learning for the Global Commons

1915
The Association of American Colleges is established at a meeting of college presidents in Chicago. Robert L. Kelly, president of Earlham College, is appointed AAC’s first president.

1917
At the 3rd AAC Annual Meeting, President Henry Churchill King (also president of Oberlin College) delivers an address defining the aims of a college education... “colleges should teach students “judgment, adaptability, discernment, interpretive power, and the culture adequate to enter into great spheres of social value...”

1925
AAC joins with eight other national higher education associations to formulate a statement of principles known as the 1925 Conference Statement on Academic Freedom and Tenure.

AAC&U Brief History

Liberal Education, Inclusion, and Collaboration: A Century of Commitment*

When 150 college executives gathered in Chicago in 1915 to create the Association of American Colleges (AAC), they chose inclusiveness and interhelpfulness as twin themes to animate their organization. These concepts sensibly unified small colleges in the early twentieth century: universities were already in ascendance, viewing liberal education and religion—formerly the foundation for all collegiate education—as mere outposts best served by the small colleges. Inclusiveness allowed many colleges that were feeling outside the growing circle of university influence to find their place within AAC. Interhelpfulness was the key, as these institutions struggled to define their purpose and reassert their importance in the changing landscape, and set standards for effective practice. As the first Executive Director, Robert L. Kelly, explained in his audit of the organization’s first two decades, AAC’s goals were “learning the truth about the colleges, telling the truth about the colleges, making better colleges.” The annual meeting became “the great rallying point for the college officers of the country,” consciously planned by AAC as its “leading implement of inspiration,” while the quarterly Bulletin expanded to a magazine that “has attempted to present a vital theory of liberal education[.]

One part of ensuring the quality of colleges was attention to academic freedom and tenure, and this concern led AAC to enact interhelpfulness by collaborating with the American Association of University Professors. Ultimately, the two organizations crafted a landmark statement in 1940 that set the terms for modern approaches to faculty hiring and protections surrounding academic freedom.

AAC’s inclusiveness worked well when its diverse constituents explored the status of the professoriate or the importance of liberal education in the curriculum, but posed thorny issues when the organization’s stance against federal aid to public higher education put it at odds with many of its own members. From the beginning, AAC had opened its doors to colleges of arts and sciences within public universities. Yet in the 1960s, AAC prioritized its advocacy for the independent sector, its mixed membership notwithstanding, by establishing a formal relationship with the Federation of State Associations of Independent Colleges and Universities. The publicly supported members of AAC resented the expenditure of organizational funds, space, and time on lobbying activities that were at odds with their interests. After a 1976 report by a special AAC commission, the organization chose to withdraw from federal lobbying. AAC helped form the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities to take on that role.

The change brought financial challenges and some concern for the association’s viability; however, the crisis clarified for AAC that its focus on liberal education was indeed the dynamic force that would hold its diverse membership together. Ultimately, the decision allowed AAC to return to the dual commitments of inclusiveness and interhelpfulness. All schools with a commitment to liberal learning, regardless of their institutional type or source of support, could be included as active AAC participants—and

AAC and the American Association of University Professors finalize the joint 1940 Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure, which is subsequently endorsed by a broad range of other associations and learned societies.

1943
With support from the Rockefeller Foundation, the AAC Commission on Liberal Education issues a report on “The Post-War Responsibilities of Liberal Education.” The report argues, among other things, that “Education, to be liberal, must be cumulative and integrative.”

1969
AAC releases a statement “Racial Problems and Academic Programs” asserting, in part, that “The nation owes a debt of gratitude to its minorities for giving a fresh and morally compelling impetus to the movement for restoring relevance to academic programs, not in any trivial or opportunistic sense but in the sense that the worth of an educational system is ultimately measured by the quality of the society it serves.”
the 1995 name change to AAC&U, the Association of American Colleges and Universities, solidified that commitment. As well, AAC&U began to articulate the need to address inequities in access and achievement for traditionally underserved students, an imperative that continues today. Collaboration and mutual support would continue to be crucial as the membership met new challenges to liberal education.

Through clarion-call reports such as Integrity in the College Curriculum, Greater Expectations, College Learning for a New Global Century, and A Crucible Moment and large-scale initiatives like American Commitments and LEAP (Liberal Education and America’s Promise), AAC&U has maintained and intensified its role as a voice and a force for quality liberal education. The founders would doubtless extol the forcefully renewed engagement with liberal learning that continues to animate the association as it launches its second century.

* This is an abridgment of Linda Eisenmann’s “Making Better Colleges: AAC’s Century of Change and Commitment,” which was commissioned to commemorate the centenary of the founding of the Association of American Colleges and Universities and published in the winter 2015 issue of Liberal Education.

The Association of American Colleges and Universities (AAC&U) is the leading national association concerned with the quality, vitality, and public standing of undergraduate liberal education. Its members are committed to extending the advantages of a liberal education to all students, regardless of academic specialization or intended career. Founded in 1915, AAC&U now comprises 1,342 member institutions—including accredited public and private colleges, community colleges, research universities, and comprehensive universities of every type and size.

AAC&U functions as a catalyst and facilitator, forging links among presidents, administrators, and faculty members who are engaged in institutional and curricular planning. Its mission is to reinforce the collective commitment to liberal education and inclusive excellence at both the national and local levels, and to help individual institutions keep the quality of student learning at the core of their work as they evolve to meet new economic and social challenges.
